A Public Research Showcase with 3-Minute Thesis Competition

UK GradResearch Live! challenges graduate students to communicate their research effectively to a general audience, with a single slide, in three minutes or less. Born out of the The University of Queensland's Three-Minute Thesis (3MT) competition, this unique research presentation initiative includes three different tracks to accommodate different stages of graduate research.

Participating in the 3MT competition allowed me to expose my research to a variety of audiences outside my field of expertise, giving me opportunities for interdisciplinary collaborations. The experience also helped me develop a new understanding of my research that allowed me to describe it to anyone, no matter their background. 3MT is a research communication booster!

Shayan Mohammadmoradi
2017 UK 3MT Winner and Regional Finalist

As a graduate student, I consistently found my own research riveting and my discoveries illuminating. Yet I often had no place to share my work with others. The 3MT gave me a space to share my discoveries and practice pitching the value of my research to a general audience.

I was completely unaware of the impact 3MT would have on my career. In addition to helping me improve my speaking skills and confidence on stage, having a link to this short video in my CV has helped me tremendously when applying to tenure-track faculty positions. Several faculty in search committees have mentioned that they are confident in my teaching skills after watching my 3MT video.
